No rest for the rebels.--The shattered Residency.--A pleasant chat.--A capful of grape.--Street-fighting.--The great Imambarra.--View from one of its minarets.--Shots from all quarters.--A draught of nectar.--Barbarous act of an officer.--Awful accident.--News from Jung Bahadoor.--Pertinacity and Vacillation.--The Moosabagh.--Napier in distress.--Lord Canning's Proclamation.--Eev. Mr. McKay's sermons. March 16th.--The rebels are to have no rest; and to-day they were rudely thrust back into the lanes of the city, and forced from the remaining strongholds which were in their hands. I started from my tent early, and joined Outram (who was to lead the attack) just as he had concluded his dispositions and was finishing his orders to the officers. The Highlanders of Douglas' Brigade, and the 23rd Welsh Fusileers were principally engaged; but Brasyer's Sikhs were also well up to the front. The sun was exceedingly hot, and as the men marched through the narrow streets between the Kaiserbagh and the Residency, the dust, aggravated by swarms of flies, was more than usually offensive. In those streets lay the bloated corpses of natives in all kinds of attitudes. I could not agree with Charles IX. that the smell of a dead enemy was always sweet, and I puffed my cigar more vigorously than ever as I wined one of those abominations. Most of them--there were old men and women among them--had been hit by fragments of shell, which always produce very horrible wounds. As we approached the shattered walls of the Resi THE SHATTERED RESIDENCY. 341 dency, a few shots were fired from the buildings; but there was no show of opposition as the 23rd and 79th extended and entered the inclosure. By a movement of a portion of the force to the right, the...
